

Daniel R. Smith has been selected as a Principal at Popp Hutcheson PLLC. The designation of Principal is reflective of elite ability and indicative of senior status at Popp Hutcheson based on recognition and acknowledgment within the firm and the property tax community.

Danny represents commercial property owners with a focus on healthcare properties in property tax disputes before appraisal review boards and at the courthouse. He also serves as Popp Hutcheson's General Counsel and Staff Ombudsman and is a leader of the firm's trial practice group. After serving as a litigation partner at a major regional law firm for fifteen years, Danny brought his extensive litigation and appellate experience to Popp Hutcheson in 2015 to focus exclusively on property tax matters.

Recently, he was the lead attorney in the successful defeat at the trial and appellate level of the City of Austin's attempt to challenge the value of all commercial property in Austin.

Danny is married to Jenny Smith, an attorney with the Supreme Court of Texas, and has two children Ingrid and Hugo.
